Lipedema Series Part IV: The Importance of Lipedema Awareness

By Dr. David Amron

Lipedema is a very under-recognized condition, especially in the United States, and I'm one of the few doctors with experience in surgically treating lipedema patients. I want to further advance both the knowledge and awareness of lipedema among the medical community, as well as within the general public.

There are many treatment centers in Europe, especially Germany, a country at the forefront of initial research and treatment for lipedema patients. Unfortunately, there are very few treatment centers in the nation, but I'm currently in the process of advancing my practice to treat more and more lipedema patients around the world.

I'm also setting up an extensive protocol, both pre and post surgery, to treat these patients in a comprehensive fashion. Along with that, I am aligning myself with many medical experts around the country, including Dr. Karen Herbst, who is a worldwide expert in fat disorders, such as lipedema.

We're working together to establish protocols, and also collaborating on studies among lipedema patients to not only advance therapies, but also to increase awareness, so that possibly one day, lipedema might be more recognized by insurance companies in terms of coverage.

Lipedema patients are not only suffering from the aesthetic effects of the disease, which creates emphasis on disproportionate areas, but they also suffer in terms of their lifestyles. Patients begin to experience a viscous cycle of worsening swelling and pain, such that they can't properly exercise, which certainly makes the condition worse, and often leads to disability.
